

BTEC LAW - UNIT 1: DISPUTE SOLVING IN CIVIL LAW

<ul> <li>Aims and purpose of civil law - Civil law aims to deal with disputes between individuals or organisations. Civil law cases usually (but not always) involve compensation or an agreement or judgement relating to finances. Civil law cases are filed by private parties, while criminal cases are usually filed by the government.</li> <li>Standard and burden of proof in civil cases - A party's duty to produce sufficient evidence to support an allegation or argument. Plaintiffs in civil cases typically have the burden of proving their allegations by a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, the prosecution typically has the burden of proving its allegations beyond a reasonable doubt.</li> <li>Situations for use: · arbitration · conciliation · mediation · negotiation · ombudsman.</li> <li>Arbitration is a formal method of dispute resolution involving a neutral third party who may a binding decision.</li> <li>Arbitration is comparable to mediation but is often used in disputes with more legal complexities, such as employment disagreements.</li> <li>Mediation does not impose a solution but instead aims to aid the parties in their attempts settle the dispute without a formal court resolution.</li> <li>Negotiation is the most flexible and informal of the dispute resolution methods. It is both voluntary and non-binding.</li> </ul>
<ul> <li>usually (but not always) involve compensation or an agreement or judgement relating to finances. Civil law cases are filed by private parties, while criminal cases are usually filed by the government.</li> <li>Standard and burden of proof in civil cases - A party's duty to produce sufficient evidence to support an allegation or argument. Plaintiffs in civil cases typically have the burden of proving their allegations by a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, the prosecution typically has the burden of</li> </ul>
<ul> <li>filed by the government.</li> <li>Filed by the government.</li> <li>Standard and burden of proof in civil cases - A party's duty to produce sufficient evidence to support an allegation or argument. Plaintiffs in civil cases typically have the burden of proving their allegations by a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, the prosecution typically has the burden of</li> <li>Mediation does not impose a solution but instead aims to aid the parties in their attempts settle the dispute without a formal court resolution.</li> <li>Negotiation is the most flexible and informal of the dispute resolution methods. It is both</li> </ul>	akes
<ul> <li>produce sufficient evidence to support an allegation or argument. Plaintiffs in civil cases typically have the burden of proving their allegations by a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, the prosecution typically has the burden of</li> <li>Mediation does not impose a solution but instead aims to aid the parties in their attempts settle the dispute without a formal court resolution.</li> <li>Negotiation is the most flexible and informal of the dispute resolution methods. It is both</li> </ul>
In criminal cases, the prosecution typically has the burden of Negotiation is the most flexible and informal of the dispute resolution methods. It is both	s to volutury and non-binding.
A2 Structure and jurisdiction of the English civil courts Ombudsmen are free to use, and their decision isn't binding. This means you can use anoth dispute resolution process or take your case to court if you're unhappy with the decision.	ther
Civil court hierarchy: A4 Legal skills
Legal sources. Reasons/permissions/how to appeal Methods of appropriate professional communication with colleagues, lawyers, clients.

B1 Sources of advice

A solicitor is to take instructions from clients, including individuals, groups, public sector organisations or private companies, and advise them on necessary courses of legal action.

Barristers specialise in representing people in court and at hearings, giving specialist legal advice (including drafting court documents and witness statements) and providing written advice.

Citizens Advice offers free advice on a wide range of issues, including benefits, housing and employment. They can help over the phone or in person at one of their centres.

Law centres offer free legal advice in centres across the country. They help with a range of issues – from benefits and employment to housing to immigration and seeking asylum.

Trade unions can offer free legal advice – and not just about employment issues.

BTEC LAW - UNIT 1: DISPUTE SOLVING IN CIVIL LAW

B2 Sources of funding

Citizens' Advice Bureaux – A free, confidential, impartial and independent service available to the public on the High Street. They offer advice by telephone, face to face, email and home visits.

Law Centres – Law Centres work within the community and specialise in social welfare. They employ solicitors who offer free legal advice and representation.

Pro Bono Work – This is where lawyers act free of charge for clients. It is a registered charity for people who do not qualify for legal aid but can't afford to pay for their legal costs.

Trade Unions – Membership of a trade union will often include legal advice as part of the monthly subscription.

B3 The cost of taking legal action

Court costs

Legal representation costs

Awarding of costs against unsuccessful party

Hidden costs, loss of reputation, enforcement of award

The cost of raising a court action using simple procedure depends on the value you are claiming:

claims £300 or less - £20 fee claims over £300 - £112 fee.

To appeal a court decision there is a fee of £65.

C1 Precedent

The doctrine of precedent - a court is bound by the decisions of a court above it and, usually, by a court of equivalent standing. Superior courts have the power to overrule decisions of lower courts and in certain cases to overrule their own decisions.

Ratio decidendi

'The reason for deciding'

The ratio decidendi is the reason for a court's decision and is part of the judgement delivered at the end of a case. Through analysis of the facts, the judge applies the appropriate rule or principle of law and makes ruling on the verdict of a case. Ratio decidendi is generally binding on lower courts and later judgments.

Obiter dicta

"things said by the way" – observations by a judge or court about a point of law which may be interesting but do not form part of the decision in the case. An obiter dictum does not have precedential value and is not binding on other courts.

Powers of the appeal courts

The Court of Appeal has the power to uphold, reverse, or amend a conviction or sentence from a lower court. This can include increasing or reducing a sentence, quashing a conviction, or ordering a retrial. Additionally, the court can provide guidance on points of law and set legal precedents.

Distinguishing - This is a method used by a judge to avoid following a past decision which he would otherwise have to follow.

Overruling - This is where a court in a later case states that the legal rule decide in an earlier case is wrong.

Reversing - this is where a court higher up in the hierarchy overturns the decision of a lower court on appeal in the same case

BTEC LAW - UNIT 1: DISPUTE SOLVING IN CIVIL LAW

D1 Duty of care D3 Damage Three stage test: · proximity · foreseeability · fair, just and reasonable. Damage can be physical, psychiatric or even purely economical. The important part is that there is evidence that the damage suffered by the claimant was caused by the Foreseeable that the defendant's carelessness could cause damage to the defendant's actions. It needs to be proven that the damage was caused by the breach claimant. of duty this is done in causation. Proximity between the defendant and the claimant. This does not dictate Factual Causation - the 'but for' test is used to ask but for not the defendant's that there must be physical proximity between claimant and defendant, negligence, would the harm have occurred anyway. rather that there must be a connection between the two. Legal causation - this is established through the remoteness of harm. Is the harm Fair, just and reasonable for the courts to find that the defendant owed a being claimed for reasonably foreseeable? duty of care to the claimant. D2 Breach of duty D4 Damages The Reasonable Person test is used to determine whether a defendant has Medical Negligence In a medical context, there can be negligent acts and breached their duty of care in a particular situation, for example, in actions taken against them. This is where someone with medical expertise negligence cases. The court asks what a reasonable person would have has been negligent. The same rules of duty, breach and damage still apply done in the same circumstances, taking into account the defendant's but the duty of care is fairly easy to establish but more time needs to be knowledge and experience at the time of the incident. spent to determine whether the doctor has breached that duty. Risk Factors D5 Burden of proof and res ipsa loquitur Vulnerability of the claimant - if the claimant is particular vulnerable or has This means 'let the facts speak for themselves'. Sometimes in Negligence, it is characteristics that make the claimant more susceptible to harm, then the Probability of harm - if the probability of harm to the claimant is really low then the standard will be lower.

standard of care is higher.

Justified risk taking - if there is a risk that can be justified then the standard of care will be reached, or a lack of reaching that standard will be justified.

difficult for a claimant to prove that the defendant was in the wrong, but using this concept a claimant can show that the defendant was in the wrong. There are three conditions/elements that the claimant must show in order for res ipsa loquitur to apply. These are;

The thing that caused the damage was wholly controlled by the Defendant. The incident that caused the damage would not have happened unless someone had been negligent.

There is no other explanation for the injury / damage caused to the Claimant or their property.